Seattle Parks and Recreation is beginning work on a Strategic Development Plan for Warren G. Magnuson Park, including the Sand Point Naval Station Historic District. This process will help guide future planning for capital investment, development and programming of this beautiful regional park.

We are inviting you to a workshop to provide input into the planning process:

The goals of this workshop will be to:

- Recognize the completed projects that have been implemented from previous plans
- Identify desired facilities, programs, services, and amenities for the park and historic district
- Prioritize currently unfunded capital improvement projects

The workshop will be held:
8:30 a.m. to 1:00 p.m. on Saturday, February 11
The Brig at Magnuson Park – Garden Room
6344 NE 74th St.

The workshop will begin with an informal half hour of coffee and light snacks. At 9:00 a.m., Mayor Mike McGinn and Councilmember Sally Bagshaw will welcome attendees and make opening remarks. The workshop facilitator will then begin leading the group through the day's agenda. Attendees will also be asked to break into smaller discussion groups to make this an interactive workshop and provide opportunities for everyone to present their ideas.

Because of limited seating in the Garden Room, please let us know how many people from your organization will attend. Parks will be seeking additional comments and input throughout the strategic planning process. Comments will also be welcome in writing, and Parks will create a listserv to keep interested people and organizations up to date on the progress of the work. After a final draft of the Strategic Development Plan is complete and reviewed by the Mayor, it will be presented to the City Council for their approval by resolution in the summer of 2012.

To RSVP, please contact Susan Walls, susan.walls@seattle.gov, 684-4946.
